New Course for Fall 2017! BSLW 1160: Real Estate, Community Development, and Planning

Thursdays, 3:00 pm - 5:20 pm

The Corcoran Center is offering a new, innovative course this fall in Real Estate, Community Development, and Planning. Taught by Michelle Ciccolo, an experienced professional in planning, development, and local government, this course will help students understand the complex process of master planning, in digestible units on topics ranging from complete streets to regional transportation to how local governments regulate development. Time will also be spent on the history and future of planning and cities in America, and the class will incorporate guest speakers and a field trip. The centerpiece of the course will be an interactive exercise in which students will present their own master plan for a simulated city block to a "city council" of visiting professionals. The Corcoran Center welcomes any questions at corcoran.center@bc.edu!
