Tennesseans give more to charity than Mississippians, but less than their neighbors in Arkansas.

A report by the Center on Wealth and Philanthropy at Boston College ranks Arkansas No. 28, Tennessee No. 32 and Mississippi No. 43 in charitable giving.

New York, Utah, California, Connecticut, Maryland, New Jersey, Georgia, Massachusetts, Hawaii and South Carolina are the top 10 states.

This new study challenges a previous study, called The Generosity Index, which has received national attention for its ranking of states by their "purported generosity and each year has reported that many states in New England and the Northeast are less generous than less wealthy states in the South," the center stated in a release.

Paul G. Schervish, one of two researchers working on the study, said, "Significant differences in tax burdens, the cost of living, as well as religious tradition and other elements must be taken into consideration in order to meaningfully compare the giving of residents in one state to another."
