

NATHANIEL CAMPBELL

is a junior in the College of Arts and Sciences, with a double major in Classics and German. He is studying abroad this semester at the Catholic University in Eichstätt, Germany. His academic interests include Classical Latin and Greek literature and Mediaeval Latin and German literature. In his free time he enjoys listening to Baroque music and reading, especially the works of J.K. Rowling. He would like to thank Dr. Meredith Monaghan for her help with the philosophy of Lucretius.

EMILY CERSONSKY

is a junior English and philosophy major in the College of Arts and Sciences, as well as a resident of Oxford, Connecticut. She is on the editorial board for Stylus, Boston College's Art and Literature Magazine, Elements, the Undergraduate Research Journal, and Epicenters, the in-the-works online Professional Arts Journal, and is also a research assistant in the English department. This issue's "Quixote" paper was originally submitted as an assignment for one of the best classes of all, Prof. Mark O'Connor's Honors Seminar.

TIM HENDERSON

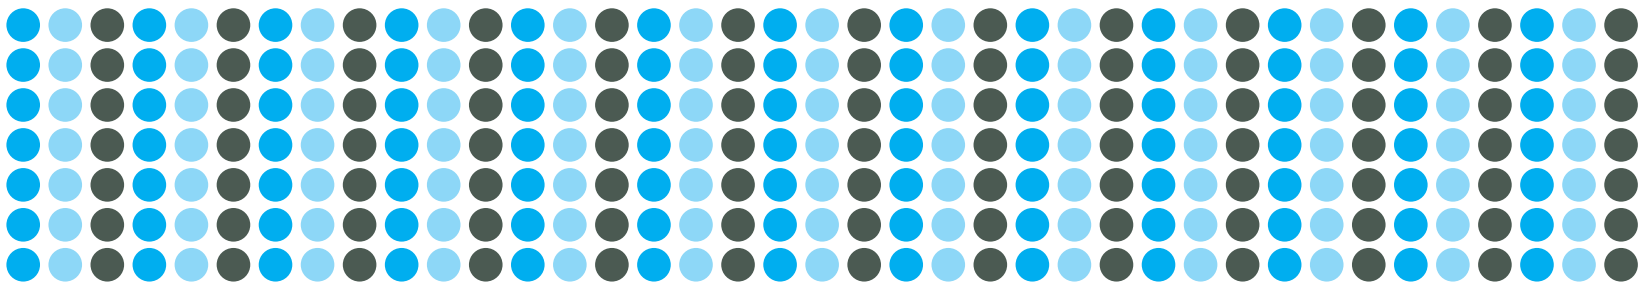

is a senior in the College of Arts and Sciences majoring in History and Philosophy with a minor in Asian Studies. He hopes to attend law school and continue to explore his interest in modern Japanese history and language after graduation. He is a member of the Order of the Cross and Crown as well as the Boston College Marching Band.

MEREDITH HUDSON

is a senior majoring in Political Science and Sociology with a Spanish minor from Waco, TX. While at BC, Meredith has been active in several social justice programs such as 4Boston, the School of the Americas Watch and a Pedro Arrupe immersion trip to Chiapas, Mexico. As a result of her interest in feminist issues, she is currently serving as a Teaching Assistant in Introduction to Feminism. After college she plans to go to Estes Park, CO, to teach Outdoor Environmental Education at the YMCA of the Rockies, and eventually she plans to attend law school. Her interests include traveling, hiking, skiing, going to concerts, rock climbing, back-packing, and working with children.

JEONG HO NAM

is a sophomore majoring in Biology and currently is in Pre-dental program. Jeong Ho Nam conducted his research in Neuroscience Lab in SUNY Old Westbury after studying under George B. Stefano, Patrick Cadet and Kirk Mantione for three years. He wants to thank them for giving him a great opportunity and thank his parents for support.

EMILY NEUMEIER

is a sophomore at Boston College. She hails from Tampa, FL- from beaches to Beantown. Emily majors in Art History with a Middle Eastern Studies minor. She works as an intern at the McMullen Museum of Art and plans to study abroad next year in Cairo.

EMILY H. ROH

is a senior studying Philosophy and Spanish in the Pre-Medical program, her introductory research thesis about the environmental, social, and cultural factors affecting malaria is an intersection of her academic interests. Currently, she hopes to get a degree in Public Health studying infectious disease epidemiology and then eventually obtain a medical degree. In addition to her appreciation towards the McNair program and her family, Emily would like to thank her mentor Mohammed Shahabuddin in the Biology Department at Boston College and Andrew Spielman at the Harvard School of Public Health.

ANN SARNO

is a senior at Boston College with an Art History Major and minors in Fine Art and Hispanic Studies. Over the past two years she has spent time abroad in Rome, Madrid, Hong Kong, Taipei and South China. She hopes to pursue a career as a professor, writer and artist in the US and overseas.

BRADY SMITH

is a senior English major from Cedar Rapids, Iowa. He spent the fall of 2004 at Rhodes University in Grahamstown, South Africa, and is currently writing an honors thesis on the work of South African playwrights Athol Fugard, John Kani and Winston Ntshona.

