Clough Center for the Study of Constitutional Democracy at Boston College will appoint Global Fellows in Residence during the 2018-2019 academic year.

Clough Global Fellows in Residence will hold academic or other professional positions related to constitutional democracy outside the United States. Academics or practitioners on sabbaticals from their home institutions are ideal candidates for these positions. Fellows will have the opportunity to spend up to one semester at the Clough Center at Boston College.

The Fellows will become integral members of the Clough Center, contributing to its intellectual life. They will have access to an office, computer, as well as extraordinary research facilities. Limited financial assistance may be available on a case-by-case basis, although applicants are expected to have resources and funding of their own.

The Clough Center is one of the most distinguished centers for the study of constitutional democracy in the world. It is a highly interdisciplinary center, which brings together jurists, economists, political scientists, historians, theologians, philosophers, and sociologists. The Center is a hub for thinking innovatively about the challenges of political and social organization in the twenty-first century. More information is available at www.bc.edu/cloughcenter.

Application Procedure
Applicants should submit:
- An updated CV or resume
- A five-page statement on the project the Fellow will undertake while in residence
- A writing sample (scholarship, policy reports, legal briefs are some of the accepted samples)
- Three references with contact details (no letter is required at the time of application)

Deadline
Applications will be considered on a rolling basis.

Applications, and further inquiries about these positions, should be submitted by email directly to the Center’s Director, Professor Vlad Perju (perju@bc.edu).
