Industry Coaches
Job Searching in Finance? Talk to one of our industry coaches. This year CSOM has added 4 alumni to our coaching team during peak recruiting to help out with this fall's job search which promises to be challenging. Their profiles and links are all on this page.

Please note they are not here for resume critiques; utilize the CSOM Team, or Peer Advisors for that. Industry coaches are for more in-depth, industry specific information.

Case Fellows available for Consulting Interview Prep
Interviewing for consulting roles? You should have at least 40 hours of prep under your belt before the interview. Once you've done some initial case prep, set up time to run through live cases with our case fellows.
It's cover letter season: Here's how to stand out
Writing a persuasive letter can tip the scale in your favor, especially for a job that requires strong communication and writing skills. On the other hand, nothing says “I’m not that interested” more than a generic cover letter. Seasoned recruiters spot them in a second. To write a good cover letter, start by looking at the ‘requirements’ or ‘qualifications’ section of the job description. Then, give two short anecdotes showing that you have those skills. Check out our career advising site for more details on how to write a stellar cover letter.

Undecided? We have an advisor for that Still not sure what Career Field makes sense for you? We also have a new career coach, Kim Neimi who will be focusing on working with our undecided students. You can also book with her on this page.

Expand your job search
Handshake is a great place to start your job search, but make sure to look at other useful sites too. Pro tip: Avoid getting 1,000+ results by using filters (e.g., location), keywords, and specific job titles. This requires some additional research but will help you target roles that are more suited to you. The "What is your position?" section of our Job Outcomes data can give you some ideas on what to search.
