Boston College, Vice Provost for Research

Online Instructional Designer

The Vice Provost for Research (VPR) office is seeking a highly talented and motivated graduate student to provide dedicated support for an online education initiative. Duties include:

- Collaborating with Instructional Designers and Media Producers on all aspects of the course design process;
- Working directly with VPR staff on developing content in Canvas;
- Working with the Vice Provost for Research team to facilitate course setup and integrations;
- Researching the practices of peer and aspirant institutions and how they are approaching all facets of Research Administration Online Education;
- Preparing documentation and other resources.

Candidates for the Online Instructional Designer position should have broad familiarity with online teaching tools and pedagogical practices, as well as experience working directly with instructors on teaching and technology topics. Teaching experience, especially in the online context, is preferred.

This position starts June 1, 2019, and includes 15 hours per week through the summer and academic year. The stipend for this position is $25,000 per year.
