Cancer survivors get more help, doctors urge

By Victor H. Broomfield

ATLANTA — Cancer survivors are getting more help, doctors urge, as the number of patients continues to rise. One of the most critical needs is support services, such as those offered by the American Cancer Society, which has a network of more than 100,000 volunteers.

There are now more than 10 million cancer patients in the U.S., and the number is expected to grow. As a result, the need for support services is increasing. The American Cancer Society offers a variety of services, including counseling, support groups, and financial assistance.

The American Cancer Society is working to meet the needs of cancer survivors. They are expanding their support services and working to increase awareness of the importance of support services for cancer patients.

US cancer experts go to Russia to plan project

By Howard Johnson

Washington D.C. — US cancer experts are going to Russia to plan a project. The project is focused on improving cancer care in Russia. The experts are from the National Cancer Institute and the American Cancer Society.

Once the project is launched, the experts will work with Russian colleagues to improve cancer care in Russia. They will work on developing new treatments and improving existing treatments. They will also work on improving access to cancer care.

The project is part of a larger effort to improve cancer care worldwide. The US government is committed to improving cancer care in all countries.

Drone requests inquest into death of 4-year-old girl

By Richard Johnson

Baltimore, Md. — A request for an inquest into the death of a 4-year-old girl has been made. The girl was killed by a drone that crashed into her home. The drone was controlled by a company that uses drones for aerial inspections.

The inquest will be held to determine the cause of death and to determine if the drone company should be held responsible.
