Professor James VanderKam is the John A. O'Brien Professor Emeritus of Biblical Studies at the University of Notre Dame, where he has taught since 1991. Professor VanderKam's areas of scholarly interest are the history and literature of Early Judaism and the Hebrew Scriptures. His research in the last 20 years has focused on the Dead Sea Scrolls and related literature, and he is a member of the editorial committee that prepared the scrolls for publication. He has edited thirteen volumes in the official series Discoveries in the Judaean Desert. He is one of the two editors in chief of the Encyclopedia of the Dead Sea Scrolls (2000). His prize-winning book, The Dead Sea Scrolls Today (1994), has been translated into six languages and came out in a second edition in 2010.
